It is called one of the Five-Chinese Flowers. There is a legend that says that the lotus flower is made of the drops of dew. When the sunlight touches this flower, it is magnified by the dew and shines like sun. This is a very good software. It runs wonderful and is very user friendly. It is pretty quick and easy to use and generates good results. And the easiest to use screen saver. If I could have but one I would have this one. The version does not appear to work on Windows Vista. I have Windows 7 and the screensaver just runs without animating, no matter the settings. It does not appear to work on XP either. Need to re-install in 7 as the instruction manual is rubbish and I've just bought two other programs with similar instructions. Text is only in Japanese, no English - and can't find any translations for certain programs. The main screen provides choices for flower width and distance between flowers. It's a shame, I couldn't see a pattern change when I set it up. The bottom screen has a big button to start the whole process again. If you set it to 'none' and when you press it, a black screen appears with text in Japanese about the program. I must admit I didn't read it. I assumed I was installing the program and didn't install it. If you set it to 'none' and press the big button it returns to the main screen with its flowers. Problem with the program is how to choose the animation in the main screen. There are no graphics to use, just a text
