To assess the risk of a stroke following cataract surgery, and its risk factors in Chinese patients. Retrospective cohort study. From January 2007 to December 2009, all patients who underwent extracapsular cataract extraction (ECCE) in a single medical center were screened. Their medical records were reviewed for type of surgery, indication for surgery and complications after surgery. The outcomes included incidence of a stroke within 30 days after ECCE. The patients were divided into two groups: groups with a history of a stroke and groups without a history of a stroke. The risk factors for a stroke in these two groups were evaluated. A total of 1299 patients were included in this study. The mean age was 64.8 ± 10.8 years, and the average follow-up period was 43.0 ± 15.8 months. The incidence of a stroke was 0.95% (12 patients). Sixty percent of strokes occurred in the cerebral hemispheres, and others in the cerebellum. The majority of patients were in the age groups 60-69 years (n = 9, 75%) and >70 years (n = 5, 42%). The outcome of the stroke group is significantly worse than that of the non-stroke group (P =.008). In multivariate analysis, a history of a stroke (P =.000), old age (P =.009) and diabetes mellitus (P =.034) were the risk factors that had the greatest association with an increased risk of a stroke after ECCE. A history of stroke, old age and diabetes mellitus are the main risk factors for a stroke after ECCE.Summers staff will miss many, including president, athletic director Hang on for a minute...we're trying to find some more stories you might like.
