Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to a transparent circuit substrate, a touch panel, and a touch panel module. More specifically, the present invention is directed to a technology for imparting a display panel with a high degree of flexibility using a flexible transparent circuit substrate, and for using the same in a display device such as a liquid crystal display device, an organic electroluminescence display device, and the like. 2. Description of the Related Art In recent years, touch panel devices having a display screen for displaying a character, an image, and the like, and a stylus, or the like, being placed in contact with the display screen to thereby perform inputting, have been developed. Among such touch panel devices, one having an optical film type display screen as a display screen, and a scanning sensor (see Japanese Laid Open Patent Application (JP-A-Heisei 11-149541)). However, because the conventional touch panel device having the aforementioned display screen structure is made of a metal plate such as an aluminum plate and the like, it is not possible to achieve a flexible touch panel device. As a result, in order to manufacture a flexible touch panel device, a transparent flexible material such as a resin film is used, for example. However, in order to reduce the weight of a flexible touch panel device, a problem occurs in that the screen portion of the device is placed close to the substrate. That is, in the case of touch panel devices having a transparent substrate, the screen portion is placed in contact with the substrate and held in close proximity. Therefore, when impact due to the placement in contact with the substrate is applied from the touch panel device to the input device which is placed in contact with the touch panel device, a

Crack18Deterministic laser nanolithography by optimized probe illumination. A new ultrafast laser nanolithography method based on scanning probe fabrication is demonstrated. The innovative idea is to realize an ultrafast laser pulse as a physical source of the scanning probe and to exploit the deterministic nature of the nonlinear optical response of the photosensitive medium, which is realized by an optimized pump-probe configuration.

In this paper, the technique is demonstrated experimentally on silicon substrates by using femtosecond laser pulses at 351 nm and optimizing
