The 54-year-old retired NASA astronaut recently told the public about his plans to travel to space and return safely to Earth. "I've wanted to go since I was a kid," Kelly told NBC News on Wednesday. "I grew up in southern California, and my mother wanted to send me to college, and I was pretty happy about that. I then went into the Air Force and then wanted to go into space. That was the defining moment for me. "Space exploration is the greatest adventure of all time." The former astronaut announced his plans to travel to space in November 2017 on Twitter, and outlined his reasons for wanting to go and why he will not do it alone. "If going to space alone wasn't terrifying enough, I've learned that you have to pay for that ticket yourself," he wrote. "When every one of us chooses to ignore the dangers and risks of this journey, I can't in good conscience do nothing." Scott Kelly is set to make a historic manned mission to space in March 2018. Kelly told NBC News it was a challenge to be the first person to travel to space a second time. It was easier for him to miss his first trip, which was in 2003. "Now I've been at this 12 years," he said. "I've got a lot more under my belt. So I think I can handle the challenges of another mission." His second flight will be longer and more challenging than his first journey, which lasted just over a month. The mission will last around a year, but Kelly said he doesn't need to go back to the International Space Station every month to get his money's worth. "I've got so much more to see and do," he said. "I'm just going to go do it." Kelly said his goal is to
